1.1 Sample Section

This section is a small smoke test for the split-file template. Replace it with your own course notes, and add more section files beside this one.

Definition 1.1.1. A template is reusable when its structure is stable and its content can be replaced without editing the preamble.

Theorem 1.1.2. If each chapter is included from the main file and each section is input from its chapter file, then the document can grow without making the main file hard to navigate.

Proof. The main file stores global configuration. Chapter files store chapter order. Section files store local content. These responsibilities are separate, so each file stays small. $\square$

Example 1.1.3. Add a second section file beside this one, then add a matching input line to the chapter file.

Remark 1.1.4. Keep package imports, theorem declarations, and custom commands in the main file; child files should contain document content only.
